Rev. Virgilio Elizondo

Rev. Virgilio Elizondo is a Notre Dame Professor of Pastoral and Hispanic Theology at the University of Notre Dame. From humble beginnings as the son of Mexican immigrants, Fr. Elizondo grew up to be the recognized “father of US Latino religious thought,” hailed by Time magazine as one of the top spiritual innovators of the 21st century. Remarkably, Elizondo is equally renowned for his capacities as priest, humanitarian, and scholar.

He has celebrated Mass before a television audience of more than six million households and is considered the leading interpreter of US Latino religion by the national and international media. Elizondo speaks seven languages, has written numerous books and articles, and has presented more than 40 keynotes and special lectures around the globe.

He has received several prestigious awards for his work on behalf of immigrants and the Mexican--American community, and in 1997 was the recipient of the Laetare Medal, the highest honor bestowed by Notre Dame. Elizondo's recent publications include: A God of Incredible Surprises (2003) and “Galilean Journey: The Mexican--American Promise” (2000).
